Also you will see in our earnings news release this morning that financial results from the developed markets branded generics pharmaceutical business have been presented as discontinued operations this quarter due to the pending sale to Mylan. As a result, the line items of our consolidated statement of earnings are now reported on the basis of continuing operations. We also provide in the release a reconciliation between continuing and discontinued operations for the third quarter and the first nine months of 2013 and 2014. For the remainder of 2014, our earnings-per-share guidance will include results from both continuing operations, as well as discontinued operations associated with the developed markets branded generics pharmaceutical business being sold to Mylan. Our commentary and guidance for sales and other P&L line items will be for continuing ops only.

[Information unrelated to the proposed Mylan transaction has been omitted.]

We remain on track to divest our developed markets business in Mylan in the first quarter of next year. Mylan is well-positioned in its global scale and capabilities to do well with this business over the long-term.

[Information unrelated to the proposed Mylan transaction has been omitted.]

In Established Pharmaceuticals, as we expected, sales improved sequentially again this quarter. The emerging market branded generics business increased double digits as a result of improved commercial execution and continued expansion of product portfolios in several of our therapeutic areas of focus. We expect continued momentum in EPD as we exit the year, including CFR, where sales have been growing consistently at a double-digit pace.

[Information unrelated to the proposed Mylan transaction has been omitted.]

And we're continuing to build Abbott for durable growth over the long-term, completing the CFR acquisition in the third quarter and working toward our first quarter 2015 close of the sale of our developed markets branded generics business to Mylan.

I'll now turn the call over to Tom.

Thomas C. Freyman - Executive Vice President, Finance, Chief Financial Officer

As Brian mentioned up front because guidance previously provided for the third quarter and the full year 2014 included the developed market branded generics business being sold to Mylan, we will continue to include the contribution from this business in our EPS guidance for the remainder of 2014. However, our commentary in guidance for sales and other P&L line items this quarter and for the fourth-quarter forecast will be for continuing operations only, that is, excluding the business being sold to Mylan. Today we reported third-quarter diluted earnings per share excluding specified items of $0.62, above our previous guidance range. Sales from continuing operations that is excluding the developed markets branded generics business increased 6.7% on an operational basis and 5.8% on a reported basis in the quarter. Including the contribution from discontinued operations, sales would have increased 5.6% on an operational basis in line with previous guidance.

[Information unrelated to the proposed Mylan transaction has been omitted.]

Turning to our outlook for the full-year 2014, today we're raising the midpoint and narrowing our EPS guidance range, excluding specified items to $2.25 to $2.27 which includes the results from our developed markets branded generics business now presented as discontinued operations and reflect double-digit growth over 2013.

Q&A

Mike Weinstein, JPMorgan

Edgar Filing: MYLAN INC. - Form 425

Thank you for taking the questions, and congratulations on a nice quarter. Miles, I wanted to really start with the EPD business and first the updated agreement today with Mylan. Could you just spend a minute on that? Because obviously there was some question about whether that transaction as it was initially constructed could be approved. So, A, can you comment on that? And then, B, the EPD performance of this quarter is up 12.9%. Can you just talk about the sustainability of that performance? It seems like a very high number. So could you just talk about how we should think about that business going forward? Thanks.

Miles D. White, Abbott Laboratories

Well, I assumed that one of the questions this morning was some clarity on whether or not the transaction with Mylan was going forward. I think that's clear. We've reported discontinued operations, carve out financials, et cetera, and as we very clearly said in the earnings release, yes, we are tracking forward, no change. I don't think there's much more to comment on other than that. So that should take away some speculation or uncertainty there. And that's all tracking according to schedule. The performance of the remainder of EPD, actually I'd say both halves we've actually seen improvement in the developed market part of the business, which is a good thing. That's the part that we're divesting to Mylan.

[Information unrelated to the proposed Mylan transaction has been omitted.]

When we're done with the Mylan transaction with the developed market business this business will be an purely emerging market business which has been our strategic intent to focus on because we see the conditions in those markets and the developing economies quite favorable to the business over time. So that remains an important strategic focus for us and I think the investors now will have a much clearer visibility and transparency to the opportunity in those markets. One of the great things about emerging markets is the growth potential there in these economies and in these healthcare systems and that's why we're focused on that, that's a very important source of growth.

[Information unrelated to the proposed Mylan transaction has been omitted.]

Mike Weinstein, JPMorgan

So, Miles, just two quick follow ups if I can. So one obviously, one, you're confident that the transaction is going to go through. Two, the piece that we've talked about that you didn't really address in all of your opening comments of this call was the vascular business which obviously had a difficult quarter. So can you just talk a little bit about how you're thinking about that business strategically and how you turn that business around given your success now in turning around EPD? Thanks.

Miles D. White, Abbott Laboratories

Yes. Well, first of all, back to your original question about confidence. We're right on track with our transaction with Mylan and I am superstitious enough not to want to speculate or hypothesize or whatever. I would say we're on track with what we said, what we expected, and everything we're doing is pointed at the conclusion on time, on schedule as described. And I don't know what else to say about it for now. I don't want to get into a lot of speculation about other stuff, but I think it's as I said tracking exactly where we want to be. So that's about as much as I can say. And or think I should say.

Okay. And then maybe lastly for you or Tom, even if you don't monetize the Mylan shares that you'll receive, you'll still be sitting on a pretty big chunk of cash, fairly underleveraged, interest rates still low but potentially rising. Any updates on how we should think about use of capital going into next year and how you might look to offset the Mylan dilution, and any headwinds that might materialize from foreign exchange in 2015?

Miles D. White, Abbott Laboratories

Well, you've got two different questions there. One is sort of capital allocation and the Mylan shares, and then with currency. So let me just deal with the capital allocation first. I'd say I'm probably not going to tell you right now what our intentions would be or what we'll do. I would say your best proxy for that is just to simply look at we've been good stewards and capital allocators in the past. We always pay a healthy dividend. We always try to balance share repurchase. But at the end of the day, we also have been investors in strategic growth opportunities and so forth, and I think the best expectation is a mix of the above. We're not going to run to one side of the ship and tip. We're going to keep things relatively balanced. I think we'll be opportunistic about our Mylan holding. Obviously, we don't want to do anything to destabilize that holding or either company. And we think that's a pretty strong and valuable investment for us so we can afford to be, I'd say, thoughtful about the disposition of those shares over time, although it's not our intent to be long-term shareholders of Mylan. And I think that's been pretty clear. And I'm glad to have the capital and the challenge of how to best allocate it for our investors. But I think if you look at our track record historically, we've been pretty good at balancing that for the range of investors. We have those that rely on income, those that rely on a cash return, those that rely on good strategic investment and so forth. So without betraying any future direction here, and certainly time and opportunity can change here, I would say you can expect more of the same from us and not something dramatically different than what you have come to expect.

Larry Biegelsen, Wells Fargo Securities, LLC

Good morning. Thanks for taking these questions. So just one multipart question for me. Just starting with the Mylan deal, I think when you announced the deal, you said it would be $0.22 diluted. Any update from the new terms? And how should we think about EPS growth off of the 2014 base with the Mylan dilution and the CFR accretion? And just lastly on the same theme, I think, Miles, in the past you said that you tried to make up any dilution from M&A. Is that still the case following the Mylan deal? Thank you.

Thomas C. Freyman, Abbott Laboratories

[Information unrelated to the proposed Mylan transaction has been omitted.]

No change at all on our forecast of 2015 impact of the divestiture of the developed markets business for EPD to Mylan. That stays at the $0.22 we estimated back in July. CFR, the way to think about that is we indicated that would add $0.07 to any baseline you would develop in 2015.

[Information unrelated to the proposed Mylan transaction has been omitted.]

Miles D. White, Abbott Laboratories

I would just add to it, there is $.22 on this divestiture of this business, but enough to try to make up, and obviously our EPS is a lot bigger than that, but that's still a chunk to make up. CFR will offset a fair amount of that. And then I would only point out that to the question earlier, we aren't constrained with capital in terms of opportunities, but we want to be opportunistic in terms of any opportunities that we add to the company. So I don't want to just rush out, and you're not suggesting this, I understand, but thoughtlessly deploy capital to simply replace EPS. Long-term, I am always looking to build EPS and grow the company. So we clearly with not only the continuing cash we earn and accumulate, but the Mylan proceeds and so forth, have tremendous flexibility for M&A, and kind of without constraint.

Edgar Filing: MYLAN INC. - Form 425

The only thing that constrains us is opportunities and the fit of those opportunities, and so on. So I think to the degree that there are investors who look at the net, let's call it dilution from the sale of established products business in the developed markets to Mylan, I would say be patient. You can't offset that or fix that in a few weeks. But longer-term, obviously, our motive is to grow and improve the company, and I just can't predict the timing of that, but I can certainly tell you I have all the flexibility in the world.
