Sprint/T-Mobile merger shows promise for the Kansas City region

By Tracey Osborne Oltjen, The Kansas City Star, June 6, 2018

With roots dating back over 100 years, Sprint is a household name in the Kansas City area. Therefore, it wasn't surprising when the April 29 announcement of a merger agreement between T-Mobile and Sprint created buzz and anticipation, as well as some uncertainty. This is expected with change, especially when it involves one of our cherished local brands.

As both companies explore a potential merger, city and business leaders, employees and area residents have been closely following developments surrounding this transaction. Speculation now begins to take shape for us locally and around the nation as details of the merger develop.

The merger builds upon Sprint's footprint in the region and promises positive impacts for economic growth, job creation and telecommunication leadership. As our region's sixth-largest private sector employer, Sprint plays an integral role in supporting the community and its people. Beyond Sprint's economic impact as an employer are its hallmarks of civic leadership and philanthropy. The company has made significant capital investment in projects such as the Sprint Center. Perhaps most importantly, you'll find Sprint team members engaged throughout the region and the country, leading civic and philanthropic organizations to improve our quality of life.

As it aspired to continued innovation and growth in the rapidly-changing world of wireless communication and connectivity, we've recognized that change could come for Sprint. This merger provides opportunities, as the new combined company promises positive impacts focusing both on people and investment. While skepticism about those promises is both healthy and expected, we're pleased with the transparency provided in the merger announcement and subsequent communications regarding net job growth and investment.

The news that Overland Park would serve as a second headquarters in the combined company is welcome. The promise that job growth will be a net positive for the combined company over what exists today, with leadership positions on both campuses, is encouraging. This recognizes the incredible assets our region and Sprint bring to the table: Kansas City's innovative, hard-working talent, low cost of living and the unique real estate asset of the Sprint campus in Overland Park. This positions us well for Kansas City to remain at the center of wireless innovation for the combined company.

Basic infrastructure used to mean roads, water and wastewater. Now it's also connectivity of people and data. The new T-Mobile stands to produce benefits far beyond the Kansas City region with promises of expansive coverage, including in underserved rural communities. With a mix of low-, mid- and high-band spectrum, the new company would be uniquely positioned to develop and deploy a nationwide 5G network. Estimates are that 5G could provide 20 times the speed of 4G. That means you could download 10 movies over 5G in the time it would take to download half of the first movie on 4G.

And the Internet of Things? That's nearly everything with an on/off switch that can connect to the internet and exchange data, from our phones to our cars, refrigerators, coffee makers, lamps, garage doors, wearables, traffic signals and oil rigs. Building a 5G network means we'll be able to leverage the full power of the next wave of connected devices, virtual reality and artificial intelligence. This brings great opportunities for telemedicine, distance learning and connecting first responders.

The new T-Mobile would build on Sprint's regional commitment and recently-announced national retail and network improvements. It would bring targeted benefits for us in Kansas City, plus deliver connectivity and access nationwide. We are proud of the Sprint legacy, and look forward to the bright future that lies ahead with the new T-Mobile.

The following contains an excerpt of a transcript of a June 9, 2018 video available on the social media platforms Periscope and Twitter featuring John Legere:

How's the merger coming. On April 29, what they're referring to is we announced a definitive agreement to bring T-Mobile and Sprint together. I'll be the new CEO. I've been spending two, three days a week in Washington. I've met with a tremendous amount of people in the FCC, Department of Justice, Senate. We are going to do Senate hearings on June 27. I'll be testifying. It's, you know, being well received. You know, it's a long process, and we haven't even filed our public interest statement yet with the FCC. And, you know, the DOJ is just getting going. But, you know, the story is fantastic. I don't want to take you through the story on a run. But it's kind of three key areas if you're paying attention.

One is, this is critical for the country. And for us to create the first real nationwide competitive globally 5G network. And we'll invest $40 billion in the first three years and create something amazing that's going to transform and drive a lot more competition into the investment of 5G. And I think it will move the United States into its kind of rightful leadership spot. So it's very important, and it's certainly something that we couldn't do without the combined capabilities. But together the network is unbelievable what we're going to create.

Second is that there's a lot of stuff we've been doing as the Uncarrier. And this will supercharge it. So, you know, with the tremendous capacity that we'll get with the integrated network. You know the cost of creating a gigabit of data is going to go down. So prices will go down. And frankly, quality will go up. And there will be a whole new set of services that will deliver a much more rural America competition. Home broadband access. Video distribution.

And lastly, we're going to create jobs. Call me. So how will 5G for those of us with current lower speeds. Listen. Within 3 to 4 years. The average speed everywhere across the US will be over 450 megabits. With peak speeds in core areas, you know, over a gig. It's amazing. We're gonna have 600 everywhere.

So, first of all. T-Mobile has brought all the competition to wireless that has been coming. The last thing you'll ever see me do is cozy up Duopolists. There's a lot more. Lot lot lot more competition that I can bring. And remember, it's not just the major wireless carriers. You've got Google playing, you got Charter, Comcast, you got Charter coming. Certainly TracFone. There's a lot of competition coming into a converged wireless and broadband space.

So, yeah, listen. When you say you'll believe it when you see it. You'll see it. You will absolutely see it, and I'll be talking about it under oath. And I have a business plan that shows it, so. Listen, I got it. It's exactly what the United States wants to do is be sure that this is in the best interest of the country and consumers. And it is. So that's my. I'm going to raise my right hand. And swear to tell the whole truth and nothing but the truth. This is going to supercharge the competition. One of the things somebody was just talking about was Google Fi and how many customers they have. Listen, you can talk about Charter, Comcast, Google Fi, other people that are coming in. The key is for me and T-Mobile to keep up the competitive pressure. Force these people. Force these companies to compete, and we've been doing that. We've added a million customers or more 20 quarters in a row. So, bring it on. I want to provide more services, better quality, faster speeds, lower prices. I want to blanket rural America. I want to provide a home broadband alternative. I want people to either replace or substitute their, you know, ridiculously non-competitive single opportunity for home broadband access. I want to bring TV services in a modern way. So, that's it. Anytime you want to talk about this, I'd be glad to. It's not Layer5 TV, it's Layer3 TV. And it is coming soon.
