We know Smucker employees are anxious to learn more about the coffee business and Folgers.

Whether you are working on the integration activities or focused on running other parts of the business, every employee makes a difference, and your role is important to the success of adding Folgers to our family of brands.

The Folgers integration represents a significant initiative for our entire organization. In fact, it's the largest transaction in Smucker's history—three times larger than the Jif and Crisco acquisition. Folgers also represents the first billion dollar brand for Smucker!

We want to keep all Smucker employees connected during this time of fast-paced activity. This newsletter is a continuation of efforts to share our learnings and to highlight some of the key transition and integration activities.

What's the Deal on the Deal

After we announced the details about the Folgers transaction in June, you might have wondered what the deal with Folgers really means for Smucker.

There is a lot of work to be done between the day of the announcement and the day when the transaction officially closes—which is the first day that Smucker legally owns the business. Early November 2008 is the target date for the close of the transaction. Until that time, Procter & Gamble continues to own Folgers and is responsible for running the business.

During this period, teams from both organizations are working to determine how best to integrate all facets of the business, including supply chain, plant operations, payroll, and consumer services.

One of the key activities we are working on is finalizing what's called a Transition Services Agreement (TSA). TSAs are fairly common and we have used them in many of our prior acquisitions. This agreement will outline the areas of the coffee business for which Procter & Gamble will continue to provide services to help Smucker run the business, for a period of time, following the close of the transaction. This will help ensure the successful transition of the Folgers business into Smucker.

Once the transaction closes, the next day—which we refer to as Day One—is when Smucker is responsible for running the coffee business and it's success.

Integration Update:

Key Activities

Our priority continues to be getting to know the Folgers business and its employees. As part of our efforts, we welcomed a team of Folgers leaders to Orrville on June 26. During this meeting, we:

Learned more about the coffee business, including information about the brand, the consumer, and the process for producing coffee, from tree (where the beans are first harvested) to cup.

Shared information about the Smucker strategy, people, culture, brands, and how we go to market.

Key Integration Milestones

We are working to determine the overall integration plan and have identified the following key milestones to date:

Day One. Following the close of the transaction, on Day One, Smucker becomes responsible for running the coffee business. To prepare for that day, we are working to define those services that will be provided by Smucker/Folgers and services that are required from Procter & Gamble.

Customer Facing (order, shipping, billing). In keeping with our integration objectives, one of our top priorities is to ensure that this transaction is seamless to both our customers and our consumers.

Plant Go-Live. A cross-functional team of business and IS leaders are working together to determine when the Folgers plants will be fully transitioned to the Smucker systems and processes. This go live date has yet to be determined, but we expect to be able to share more details after the Situation Appraisals (SA) are complete.

On August 5-6 team meetings will be held to begin the process of establishing activities and dates for these key milestones. More details about these key milestones and what they mean to all of our constituents will be shared as decisions are made.

We admire the dedication of the New Orleans employee . . .

In August 2005, Hurricane Katrina devastated southeast Louisiana. Not excluded from this was the Folgers organization in New Orleans. 65% of Employees suffered a complete loss of their home. What should be the darkest of times, transpired into the example of the commitment and

Key Learnings about the Coffee Business:

The Folgers Coffee Company is the leading producer of retail packaged coffee products in the U.S. with annual sales of $1.7 billion.

The U.S. Retail business of Folgers accounts for approximately $1.6 billion in sales, which comes from two key areas:

Mainstream, primarily the Folgers brand at $1.4 billion

Gourmet, which includes both the Folgers Gourmet Selections and Dunkin' Donuts brands, at $240 million

Folgers is the category leader in a variety of different packaging and coffee products, including roast and ground, whole bean, and instant coffee.

Based on projections, gourmet coffee will drive much of the expected future growth in the coffee business with an increasing trend towards premium brands and products.

Folgers sources coffee from 30 countries and 70 suppliers.

There are over 100 types of coffee.

Folgers has a long tradition of being part of everyday meals, casual get-togethers, and special occasions – a perfect fit with our family of brands.

resiliency of the New Orleans organization.

Over 120 employees returned to work within the first 18 days post-storm, many of whom returned to work before they could get access to their homes due to the flooding.

The sites had over a 90% return rate of employees post-storm, the highest of any company in the region.

Folgers was the first manufacturer back in operation in the region. They were shipping to customers within two weeks, and the first packing line was fully operational within three weeks.

While employees continue to rebuild their lives, their homes, and their neighborhoods - they have delivered record site performance and delivered all product launches and initiatives on time.
